

While no agency actions were required for the 2016 Regulatory Fairness Act performance audit, an interagency work group made some improvements.

State agencies began work, well in advance of legislation (2SHB 1120) being enacted into law, to identify needed guidance and tools. In addition, agencies and business associations worked together with the Office of the Code Reviser to modify the CR-102 form to not only include a checklist of allowable exemptions (beyond what the SAO recommended), but to also provide the public with guidance for obtaining copies of the SBEIS or cost calculations.

The ORIA must consult with the Office of the Attorney General (AGO) in providing online guidance and tools. Online guidance and tools may include the creation of templates and resources to assist agency employees with consistent compliance with the RFA.